Working Toward a Healthier Community

Traditionally the beginning of a new year is a time when people choose to make changes or improvements in their lives. Many people use this time to focus on their health - a topic on everyone's mind this year. Here at TWC, our resolution is to continue to work toward a healthier community.

The physical health benefits that result from walks taken along our beautiful trails are obvious. The benefits to mental health from time spent in nature are becoming more well-known, also. However, one of the factors that can be overlooked in the work of The Wilderness Center, is how the work that we do in land conservation contributes to the physical health of our community.

Physical health has many contributing factors, referred to in the healthcare industry as social determinants of health. One of those key factors is the environment in which we live. Do we have access to clean air, clean water and healthy land surrounding us? The conservation efforts that TWC completes in the communities in and around where we live and work is contributing to our physical health.

Here at TWC, we are working to protect everything from forested ecosystems, to wetlands and streams, to grasslands and fields. The quality of those habitats impacts the water quality that we see in each watershed, while also providing cleaner air for the surrounding area. By protecting and improving these lands, The Wilderness Center is working to bring a better quality of life to everyone within our community.

Moving into this new year, TWC is excited to invite more community members to join us in efforts to steward the land around us. Through the Backyard Habitat program of our Community Conservation Initiative, TWC will focus on educating and supporting our community to make small changes at home to support a larger conservation effort.

"No matter the size, there are small steps that you can take in your backyard to make a difference," says Executive Director Jeanne Gural. "TWC wants to be your resource and partner in making positive, healthy changes that benefit ourselves, our neighbors, our wildlife and our Earth."

You can start improving the health of your corner of the world on April 24 at a Backyard Conservation Best Practices course. Attendees will learn how to create and maintain quality habitat while also learning the practical skills that will make the work efficient, safe, and purposeful. Instructors will cover topics like invasive species identification and control, tree planting, pruning, and creating natural habitat for wildlife.

Other upcoming Backyard Habitat classes include:

Director's Corner

2020 was an unusual year, but thanks to our members and caring individuals like you, The Wilderness Center (TWC) is still here working on your behalf. Each of us have faced challenges this past year. In trying times, nature can offer opportunities to quiet our minds and help us see all that we have to be thankful for. We at TWC are thankful for all of you, and we're proud that we were able to provide needed relief, exercise and engagement for so many community members, families, friends, and even a few (leashed) dogs. Our trails, which remained open and free of charge, have seen so many new visitors and old friends sharing the sunshine, birdsong, and respite. We hope we offered some comfort.

Through it all, our land conservation, sustainable forestry, community outreach, and education efforts never slowed. In fact we have a lot to celebrate this year. Our conservation team removed thousands of invasive plants from our lands and seeded these areas with native species that will offer food and nesting opportunities for songbirds, butterflies, and pollinators. We also continued protecting over 4,000 acres of habitat within our shared watershed. Our forestry staff managed hundreds of acres of woodlands for private and municipal owned lands in a sustainable, forward thinking manner. Our education team developed and implemented curriculum-based programs for parents with children at home and those in school. We offered adults multiple opportunities to engage with and learn from each other through our shared appreciation for wildlife and wild places. As always, our focus has been on improving lives and protecting areas for all of us who call this area Home.

As we embark into this coming year, I also want to share with you our new Community Conservation Initiative. This program couples our involvement in the International Dark Skies Initiative with our local, community-focused, Backyard Habitat program. These programs focus on how our local families, schools, and even businesses can all pitch in to make small changes that can have a big impact. Stay tuned for more to come.

Thank you so much for your support!

Sincerely,

Jeanne M. Gural
Executive Director

TWC Receives Grants

This fall, The Wilderness Center was grateful to receive grants from the Stark Community Foundation and the Wayne County Community Foundation. We were so pleased to be able to immediately put these funds to use in serving the students, teachers, parents and adults in our surrounding community.

In response to the COVID-19 pandemic and the challenges being faced by schools, TWC needed to update and adapt our educational programming to meet these changing demands. These grants have funded the purchase of needed equipment and materials to enable The Wilderness Center's STEM-based environmental education program to move to an online forum, as well as the necessary training to support our education department in this transition.

The impact of this investment can be seen in TWC's new program, Your Wild Classroom. This series of virtual courses, launched with the support of these funds, takes on a single topic of study each month and Community Engagement Coordinator Carrie Elvey facilitates the Dark Sky Conservation Conference using equipment provided by a grant from the Stark Community Foundation.

Your membership makes our mission possible.
Thank you for your continued support.

WILDERNESSCENTER.ORG

engages homeschooling and classroom students through live virtual presentations, video lessons, activities and worksheets. Parents and classroom teachers can choose to subscribe for the entire semester, or one specific lesson aligning with the current topic of study. The topics, ranging from soils and entomology, to geology and ornithology, are all designed to meet Ohio standards.

This upgrade of capabilities has also allowed The Wilderness Center to reach new audiences. In addition to offering online programs for homeschooling families and classroom teachers, TWC has been able to partner with other organizations to offer some innovative programming. One example of this is the Dark Sky Conservation Conference which was presented in partnership with the International Dark Sky Association this past November. In place of their annual Woodcarving Show, our TWC Woodcarvers Club also offered a full day of free, virtual carving classes on Facebook using this equipment. Both programs attracted people from outside the state!

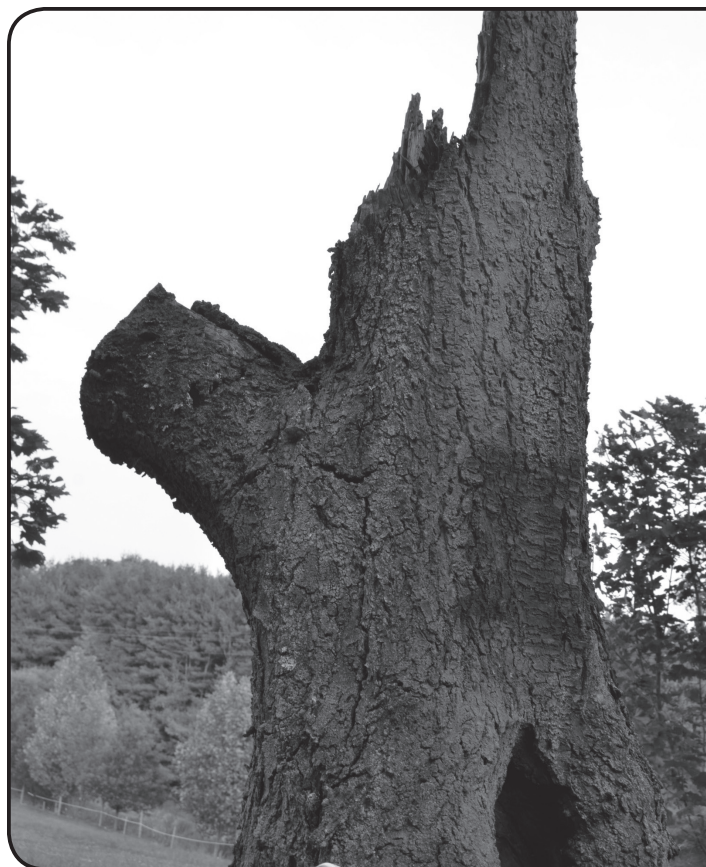

The grants were made possible by The Robert L. and Kathleen M. Polsky Foundation of the Wayne County Community Foundation, and combined contributions from The William J. Lemmon Charitable Fund, The Immediate Impact Alert Fund, The Gessner Family Foundation (Immediate Impact Alert Fund), The John B. Nolan Fund, The Wright Family Charitable Fund, and The Fenway Fund at Stark Community Foundation.

Conservation Corner

Standing dead trees, called snags, play a vital role in the life cycles of many different species of wildlife as well as the plant community.

As a nesting site in summer or cover site in winter, the insulation of a snag provides wildlife with refuge from the elements including both high and low temperatures as well as protection from wind, snow and rain. Both barred and screech owls are found nesting in these trees. Species such as the pileated woodpecker use snags as areas for both nesting and foraging sites for insects. Other bird species using areas excavated by woodpeckers include chickadees, tufted titmouse, wrens, blue birds and wood ducks. Other wildlife species such as red and gray squirrels, gray tree frogs, and white footed and deer mice also use snags for nesting and cover habitat too. Insects found along the surface of a snag provide food resources for a wide variety of wildlife such as bird, mammals, reptiles and amphibians. Snags also provide excellent structure as perches for larger bird species such as raptors.

As decomposition of the snag continues, the nutrients once stored within the snag are released and made available to the surrounding plant community. So let those standing dead trees in your woodland patch remain standing (unless they present a potential hazard) and marvel at the way nature continues the circle of life.
